How It Was that They Successfully Resisted So Long.

surface crossing at Brentwood, St. Louis liberal terms than these and no people have Boers have shown a courage and a fortitude unsurpassed in the annals of the human race. "A little people-few, but apt in the field," they have made good the prophecy of their venerable chief, and exacted a price for their independence that has "staggered humanity." In the two years and seven months of the war they have placed 102,779 British troops hors du combat, as follows: Killed and died in the field, 21,966; missing and prisoners, 9,565; invalided, 71,-48. The Boers have lost to achieve this result 18,320 men killed and wounded, and 7,000 prisoners, now to be released. This is remarkable record to be made by a nation of farmers who knew nothing of military life, except how to ride and shoot. And the record is made the more remarkable by the expenditure of treasure that has been forced on the British. The total cost of the war on the side of the Boers is one and a quarter billion dollars, and there

re bills yet to be paid. How was this remarkable achievement brought about? The contest was not only one between different races, but between different types of men. The day is distant when the British recruiting sergeant took the field to secure recruits that he had little trouble in getting suitable men. The Briton was in that day an agriculturist. The young farmers of the British isles had the physique for soldiers and were a hardy and a tough-fibred race; but a change has | tempt it. come over England, a change that is even now throwing its shadow across this country. The agriculturist has become an artisan. Whereas formerly five men out of six were fit for military service, the experience n the South African war has shown that of those who volunteered only a minority ere accepted for service, as the country eeded men. The artisan in England, as he artisan in this country at the outbreak the Spanish-American war, developed fects on his physical examination that aused his rejection; flat feet, absence of w teeth and other things which seem absolutely absurd to the layman, but to hich the experienced mustering officers attach great importance, caused the rejection of vast numbers of men. The Boers, eing an agricultural class, were not aficted with flat feet, and they had sets of eeth that would masticate any ration that light be issued to them. They were sollers from the start, all save the training. while the British recruit could only be made a soldier by a costly expenditure of me, money and brain. There is in this war a lesson to be earned by this country. The impression revails that the military power of the nion increases in exact proportion to the growth of population, but this is incorrect. the fighting unit of this country is not as fective as it was one hundred years ago, r the same reason that the fighting unit has deteriorated in Great Britain; men are is brave as ever, but they are by no means is efficient; as the agriculture of a country ecays and its commerce and manufacers at Pryorsburg, below here, last night, tures grow, the volunteer soldier, and evand killed both men. A freight train broke ery soldier in this country and Great Britwould not, it is believed, give any cause for in two near the same place this morning ain is a volunteer, there being no conscription, is rendered less efficient as a soldier, the man from the rural districts, either as a marksman, or as a man who will retain his activity and his strength under adverse conditions. Washington and Pennsylvania, battles. Commerce and manufactures add rapidly to the wealth of a country, but it should not be forgotten that there come times in the history of every nation when there must be a death grapple for existence, and when men, not money, must save the nation, and civilization. Money will buy the modern rifle, it is true, but it will not point it straight and it cannot set the sights for distance. These things come naturally to the countryman, and are not not known, but the British have expended | impaired by the coarsest rations or the severest weather or the most trying hardships. Before the artisan soldier has learned to shoot, the countryman is a vet-This and other virtues has made the Boer a formidable adversary, few in number though he is, and it has saved to him his liberty. His independence has departed, but liberty can remain after independence has fled, and the burghers will always be a free people. No nation can take their freedom from them and none will dare at-

Filial Piety.

Philadelphia Times. Mr. Peixoto, lodgekeeper at Girard College, prides himself on his intimate knowledge of the regulations of the institution. The other day a bright-looking young hoodlum of some seven years of age, carrying a telescope bag and with a cigarette jauntily poised in his mouth, entered the lodge, "Say, I want to come to this school." said the visitor.

thing," answered Peixoto. "Well, I'll throw it away," was the ready "Is your father living?" asked the lodge keeper, "Course he is," said the boy.

"You can't come here if you smoke that "We don't admit pupils whose fathers are not dead, only orphans." "Gee!" was the response. "Then to get in I've got to kill the old man. Dat's tough!"

Presbyterian Babies.

Presbyterian babies now know that they will not be damned-the General Assembly has said so. The little tootsie wootsies of other denominations must get along the best they can, for, poor things, they have no General Assembly. Still, if they have plenty of milk, they may weather the want of creeds. Let us hope so.

Liberty Bell to Return.

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 7.—The historic Liberty bell was removed from its tion, is rendered less efficient as a soldier, for in the nature of things the artisan of the cities and towns cannot stand before on its return to Philadelphia to-morrow.
